

1 : About my “topos” (2012)

The first phase of my guraduate research that “Notation of topos”

How are relationships between people and places built?
In this question lies hidden a hint that can illuminate the individuality and characteristics of a given place.Using the life of one person as a starting point, I look for the answer in a project that expresses various places.
“Phase 0 – About my ‘Topos’ , which has been consolidated into a packet, is a preface of a series of pieces that first started with a self-deconstruction. In an ordinary residential town made during Japan’ s period of rapid growth, what do people interact and come in contact with as they grow?While hoping to discover what we should inherit from these places by looking at these moments passed, I created my project to explore the Notation of Topos.

My goal is to discover the personality of places through the memories of people, and to bring people together by using a new method of description as an intermediary.

What does environmental experience mean?
Environmental experience refers to things like the feeling of stepping on crisp blades of green grass or of the moist, warm odor of grazing cows.
The accumulations of feelings such as these are what constitute experiences.How many varied activities and experiences lie hidden or condensed behind simple words like “I played house there once”?

These are drawings I drafted for the purpose of exploring this, and the various elements that were discovered along the way. By making use of these drawings made while observing the scenery that gave birth to such experiences, I attempted to deconstruct these moments

These are “pillars of time” that show moments in people’s lives and the time accumulated by certain places. The three pillars each show differing time scales. The orange painted section shows when the person who made the pillar was born. The image they paint is that, through these places, people are connected to a time that transcends any singular moment in time as well as any one person’s lifetime.

Looking at this place in this moment is akin to looking at just the surface of the ocean of time.

Pillar of 140 years : Mitakeue-park

There is also a 140-year pillar. A shrine changes the look of the park over time, and along with the growth of a child, they accumulate memories.

[Time , Place , Memories]

Pillar of 500 years : Sweet acorn's old tree at Hachiman shrine

On the 500-year pillar, there is a large acorn tree that has seen many moons and many years.
The moment in time of a small child who walked naively under the tree collecting acorns became interwoven into these many moon and years.

[Time , Place , Memories]

Pillar of 10000 years : Spring water at old Japanese garden named Mogusaen

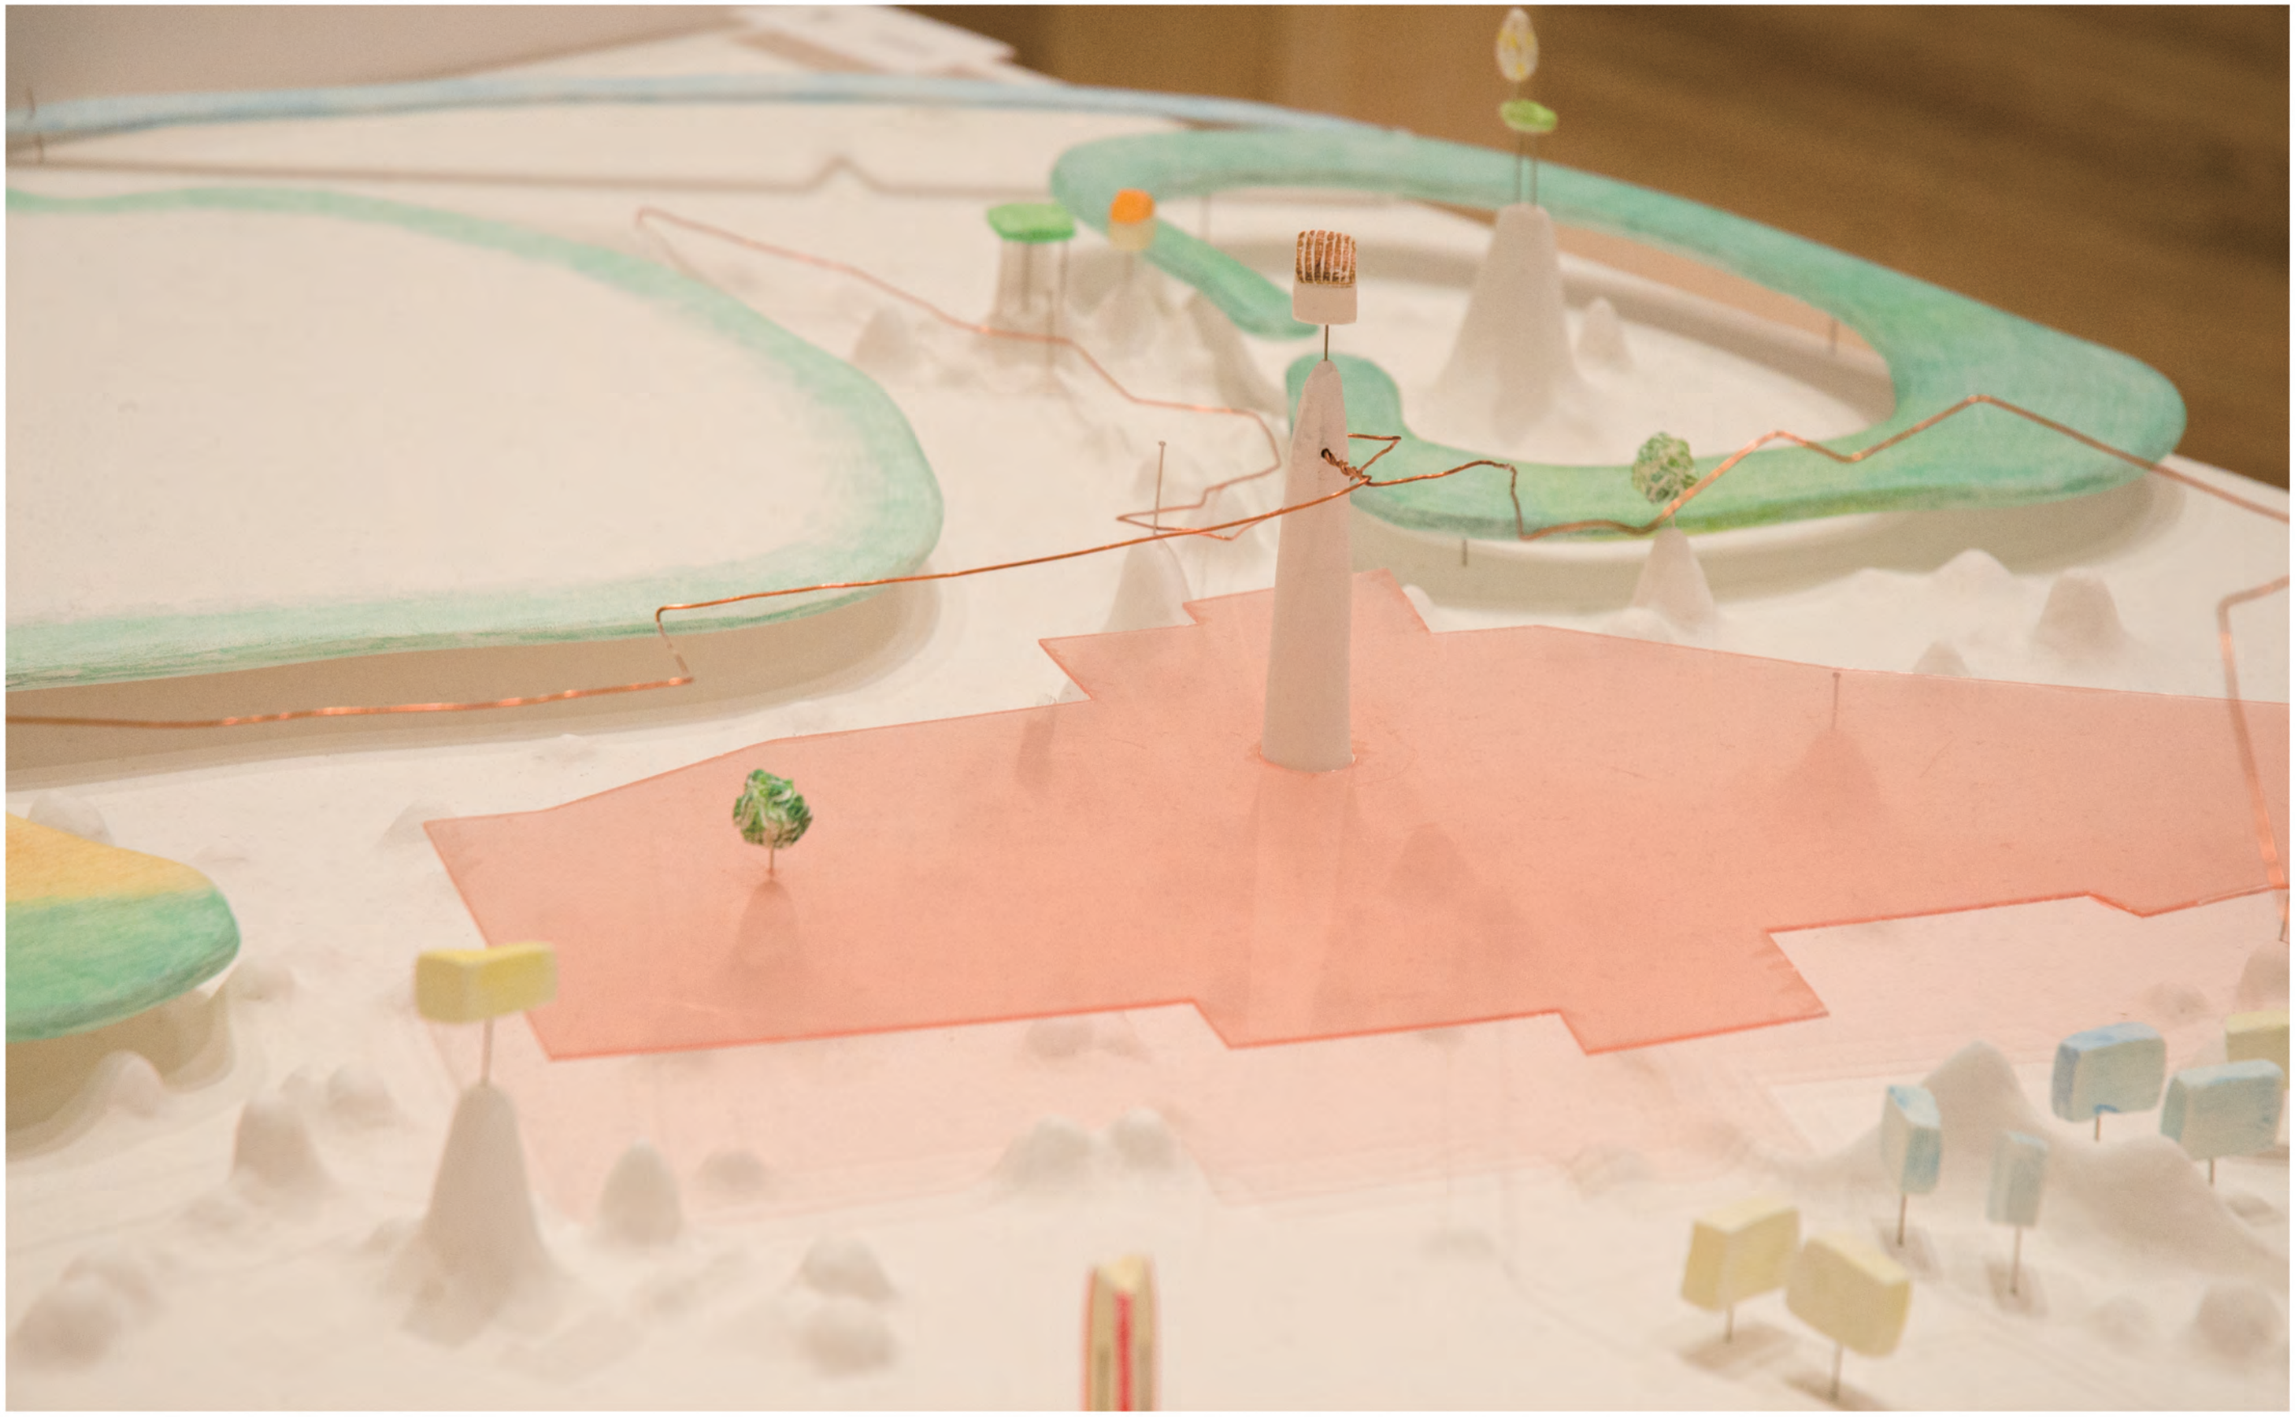

On this 10,000-year pillar, there is a water spring. The spring where I once caught a freshwater crab as a child flows continuously even later as I walked through it wearing high heels as an adult.
